

And it's time to move on. Like the pairing of an aged cheese with the perfect glass of wine, we're faced with finding a suitable cap to an already brilliant night. And the winner is...Prago, the Argentine Café at the corner of Riverside and Browne. A sweet lil' hot spot, pulsing with energy and good vibrations—partial courtesy of D.J. J.A.H who's in the house and rockin' the roughly 900 square feet—the décor is simple, yet cozy, with exposed brick and pressed-tin ceiling from 19th century days, juxtaposed with modern lighting fixtures, copper trim, and artwork, all of the human form and very tasteful. We're lovin' every bit of the atmosphere and ready to hang out 'til closing time. So we snag the only table left, next to the D.J. and his magical spinning fingers, and order two Chambord Kamikazes. Looking out the bar-front, entirely of glass, it feels like J.A.H. should be spinning Jingle Bells as the snow comes down in buckets. But it's pure beautiful.

We talk—very loudly. We people watch—very entertaining. And we have a great time, making a pact to do this at least every other week. But soon we're wrapping up our night with—hands down—one of the best lattes we've ever had, in a very large yellow cup, contrasted nicely on a turquoise saucer, and looking at the clock, see that it's a mere 11:30 p.m. Ok, so we're a little out of practice. Next time, we'll get the late part in there. But it was a great date night, nonetheless.

 Email this TODO ||  Get 1kTODO updates ||  Trackback this TODO

Related posts: The Milk Bottle Restaurant || Toddler Fun at Webster Park-Spokane || Steelhead Bar & Grille || The Elk Public House ||

Share this TODO: These icons link to social bookmarking sites where readers can share and discover new web pages.

